Dried Chilies

Dried chilies are products obtained by drying the fresh ripe fruit of the paprika, which is a plant from the Capsicum genus.

Dried chilies can be naturally sun-dried or dehydrated in hot air circulation tunnels. Dried chilies are produced in different forms, but there are three main forms: as a whole, crushed flakes and ground powder. Crushed or ground chillies can be produced with or without seeds.

The popularity of spicy food contributes to the increasing demand for dried chillies on the European market. European dried chilli consumers prefer mild chilli varieties and are showing interest in the authentic and new chilli flavours. Spain is the largest dried chilli importer in Europe but the market is largely concentrated by the import of cheap dried chillies from China. Therefore opportunities for new developing country suppliers can be found in less concentrated markets such as Germany, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, France and Poland.
